This class was amazing, and I would like to attribute much of that to the commitment of both instructors. By offering time outside of class for additional discussion, constantly introducing new ideas, and providing guidance when necessary this course was highly efficient and interesting. The challenge level was perfect, and the homework readings - however lengthy and time-consuming - grasped my attention for the most part.
Strengths: you will rank him as one of the best teachers you will ever have
He was very engaging in class, and he never let the class feel boring.
Joshua is incredible. Every class he gives us new insight and ideas— that entirely change the way I think— while being really funny.
Strengths: well read, knew how to direct discussion in class, encouraged independent thinking.

The course itself was appropriately difficult; the homework was doable (and each of the texts covered in class were essential to the broader scope of the entire course, not to mention repeatedly discussed throughout the duration of the class) but often kept me up late on weeknights. My only dislike regarding my experience of this course was the discrepancy between the course description and the reality of the course; on the first day of class I felt completely blindsided by the actual content of the course. There was much more philosophy and abstract reasoning involved in the course, and it would be great - although I didn't mind the change in thought, others might - for the course overview to include that for future reference.
Engaging, exciting, and informative
The only thing I would change would be the name, so that it better reflects the content.
The course is honestly my favorite class I've ever taken in my entire student career. We learn so many different ideas in such a short period of time it is unbelievable. One of the only areas of improvement is the course description. It is quite misleading. I do not feel that changing the course description would hurt the appeal of the class as I would have chosen the "actual" course over the course in the description.
Reading material can be reduced or grouped pair readings can improve understanding before class.
